Comparative Governance and Political Trajectory in Ireland: A Strategic Analysis of Fine Gael and Fianna Fáil (2020–2026)

Section 1: Introduction and Political Landscape

The political topography of Ireland in early 2026 is defined by a paradox of stability and deep-seated structural friction. Following the General Election of November 2024 and the subsequent formation of the 35th Government in January 2025, the dominance of the "Civil War" parties—Fine Gael and Fianna Fáil—has been reasserted, yet the internal dynamics of this partnership reveal a widening chasm in administrative competence, ethical heritage, and strategic vision. This report provides an exhaustive, forensic analysis of these divergences, anchoring its inquiry in the independent achievements of key Fine Gael ministers—Simon Harris, Helen McEntee, and Hildegarde Naughton—while contrasting them against the historical and contemporary failures of the Fianna Fáil apparatus, from the foundational corruption of the de Valera era to the bureaucratic inertia of Mícheál Martin and Jack Chambers.

The Irish electorate, while opting for continuity in the aggregate, has signaled a desire for a specific brand of governance: one that is responsive, transparent, and capable of agile intervention in social crises. The analysis that follows posits that Fine Gael has successfully pivoted to meet this demand through a doctrine of "individual-focused delivery," best exemplified by Simon Harris's interventions in health and education. Conversely, Fianna Fáil appears trapped in a legacy of systemic obfuscation, weighed down by a genealogy of corruption that stretches from the Irish Press scandal to the banking collapse, and perpetuated by a modern leadership cadre that struggles with decisive action.

Furthermore, as the political cycle matures toward the next general election (likely 2029 or 2030), the question of coalition architecture becomes paramount. With the rise of the Social Democrats as a credible force on the center-left and the stagnation of Sinn Féin, Fine Gael faces a strategic imperative to redefine its alliances. This report will explore the feasibility of a Fine Gael–Social Democrats axis, arguing that it represents the most viable path to a modern, progressive stability, in stark contrast to the toxicity of any potential arrangement with Sinn Féin.

The methodology employed herein is strictly analytical, drawing on legislative records, tribunal findings, electoral data, and departmental outputs to construct a narrative of comparative governance. It seeks to answer a fundamental question: In a landscape of coalition compromise, which party retains the capacity to lead Ireland into the late 2020s?

Section 2: The Harris Doctrine — Agility and Responsiveness in Public Administration

The career of Simon Harris offers a distinct model of political operation within the Irish executive. Across multiple portfolios—Health, Justice, Further and Higher Education, and ultimately the office of Taoiseach—Harris has cultivated a style of governance that prioritizes the immediate alleviation of individual hardship over the rigid adherence to bureaucratic process. This "Harris Doctrine" stands as a counterpoint to the traditional administrative conservatism of the Irish state.

2.1 Minister for Health (2016–2020): The Ava Barry Intervention

The tenure of a Minister for Health in Ireland is frequently referred to as "Angola" due to the ubiquitous presence of landmines—crises in trolley numbers, waiting lists, and industrial disputes. However, Harris's time in this office is defined not by systemic management alone, but by a singular, high-profile intervention that demonstrated a willingness to prioritize humanitarian need over legislative inertia: the case of Ava Barry.

2.1.1 The Bureaucratic Impasse

In 2017, the issue of medicinal cannabis licensing was a regulatory grey area, heavily policed by a risk-averse civil service. The case of Ava Barry, a young girl from Cork suffering from Dravet Syndrome (a catastrophic form of epilepsy), brought this tension to the fore. The standard pharmacological treatments available in Ireland were ineffective, and Ava was enduring multiple severe seizures daily. Her mother, Vera Twomey, had embarked on a highly publicized campaign, including walking from Cork to Dublin, to highlight the family's plight. They were forced to reside in the Netherlands to access cannabis oil, a treatment that had successfully halted the seizures but remained illegal to import into Ireland without a ministerial license.[1]

The "system" response was typical of Irish administration: a citation of regulations, a deferral to clinical experts who were hesitant to prescribe unapproved treatments, and a general paralysis in the face of a novel challenge.

2.1.2 The Decision to act

Simon Harris's intervention broke this deadlock. By granting the license in November 2017, he did not merely sign a document; he overruled the institutional hesitation of the Department of Health. The impact was immediate and profound. As Vera Twomey stated, "Ava has been granted the licence... we are coming home... seizures have completely stopped".[1]

This decision had ripple effects beyond the Barry family. It signaled a shift in the state's risk appetite regarding medicinal cannabis, paving the way for the Medical Cannabis Access Programme (MCAP). It demonstrated that the executive could, when motivated, cut through the "red tape" that often defines the patient experience. This achievement was purely independent—driven by Harris's personal engagement with the issue—and stands in stark contrast to the collective inaction that had preceded it. It established Harris's brand as a politician who could "get things done" when the system said "no."

2.2 Minister for Further and Higher Education (2020–2024): The SUSI Expansion

Upon the formation of the coalition government in 2020, Harris was appointed to the newly created Department of Further and Higher Education, Research, Innovation, and Science. Critics initially viewed this as a demotion or a "made-up ministry." Harris, however, used it as a platform to fundamentally restructure the economics of third-level education, specifically targeting the "squeezed middle" and the postgraduate sector.

2.2.1 Structural Reform of Postgraduate Funding

Prior to Harris's tenure, postgraduate education in Ireland was largely the preserve of those who could afford substantial tuition fees (often €6,000–€10,000) and living costs, as state support was minimal. Recognizing that the modern economy demanded advanced qualifications, Harris initiated a systematic expansion of the Student Universal Support Ireland (SUSI) scheme.

- Budget 2023 Interventions: In a direct response to the cost-of-living crisis, Harris secured a once-off increase of €1,000 for postgraduate students meeting eligibility criteria, raising the Postgraduate Fee Contribution Grant from €3,500 to €4,500. This was not a token gesture; for many students, it was the difference between continuing their education or dropping out.[2]
- Maintenance Grant Restoration: Perhaps most significantly, Harris reintroduced maintenance grants for postgraduates, worth up to €2,384. This reversed austerity-era cuts that had stripped postgraduates of living support, acknowledging that students cannot study if they cannot eat or pay rent.[3]
- Research Investment: Beyond SUSI, Harris drove investment in high-level research. In 2021, he announced €28 million in funding for the Irish Research Council, supporting 330 awards. Crucially, he allocated an additional €7.5 million specifically for the technological university sector, democratizing access to research funding beyond the traditional "elite" universities.[4]

2.2.2 The "Peace of Mind" Philosophy

Throughout these reforms, Harris utilized the rhetoric of "peace of mind".[2] This framing is critical. It positioned the state not as a passive funder but as an active partner in the student's life journey. By increasing the income threshold for the 100% student contribution grant to €55,924 in 2024 [5], he effectively abolished "fees" for a vast swathe of middle-income families. This tenure solidified Fine Gael's claim to be the party of aspiration. While Fianna Fáil focused on the macro-economy, Harris focused on the household balance sheet, delivering independent achievements that were felt directly in the pockets of voters. The starkness of this achievement becomes clear when contrasted with the "confusion" and resistance offered by his coalition partners in later budget cycles.

Section 3: The Stagnation of Mícheál Martin — A Legacy of Ambiguity and Delay

If Simon Harris represents the "agile executive," Mícheál Martin represents the "hesitant administrator." Martin's career, spanning decades at the highest levels of Irish politics, is characterized by a caution that often bleeds into paralysis. His tenure as Minister for Education (1997–2000) and his subsequent leadership reveal a pattern of systemic neglect and policy ambiguity.

3.1 The Education Portfolio (1997–2000): The Myth of the "Youngest Minister"

Appointed by Bertie Ahern in 1997 at the age of 36, Martin was heralded as a fresh face for a new millennium.[6] However, retrospective analysis of his time in the Department of Education reveals a tenure that failed to capitalize on the emerging economic boom to solve fundamental infrastructure deficits.

3.1.1 The School Building Crisis

The late 1990s saw the beginning of the Celtic Tiger, yet the physical condition of Ireland's schools remained deplorable. Martin inherited a "significant backlog" of building projects.[7] Rather than utilizing the growing exchequer surplus to launch a "Marshall Plan" for schools, the department under Martin became a bottleneck.

Critically, Martin reversed the policy of his predecessor, Niamh Bhreathnach, who had devolved some capital budgets to local school boards to expedite repairs. By re-centralizing control, Martin slowed the pace of delivery, leaving hundreds of schools in "substandard condition" with rotting prefabs and inadequate sanitation.[7] The "building crisis" that plagued Irish education well into the 2000s was exacerbated by this failure to act decisively when the resources were first becoming available.

3.1.2 The Special Needs Deficit

While Martin is often credited with the introduction of Special Needs Assistants (SNAs), the implementation was deeply flawed. The system established was adversarial, forcing parents to undergo humiliating bureaucratic battles to prove the "necessity" of support for their children. The failure to forecast demand or to train sufficient personnel meant that while the concept was introduced, the reality for families was one of waiting lists and scarcity. This parallels the broader Fianna Fáil approach: announce the policy, but neglect the machinery of delivery.[8]

3.2 The Strategy of "Confusion": The 2024/2025 Fee Dispute

The divergence in competence between Harris and Martin was most visibly displayed during the 2025 dispute over third-level fees. This episode serves as a perfect case study in how Fianna Fáil's instinct for obfuscation contrasts with Fine Gael's drive for clarity.

3.2.1 The Dispute

In July 2025, as families prepared for the academic year, a rift emerged. Simon Harris, having established the €1,000 fee reduction as a standard support, advocated for its continuation. However, the new Fianna Fáil Minister for Higher Education, James Lawless, supported by Mícheál Martin, moved to scrap the subsidy, arguing it was "temporary" and "unsustainable".[9]

3.2.2 "Confusing the Nation"

Martin's intervention in this debate was damaging. He warned against "speculation" and "noise," yet offered no reassurance to parents.[10] By floating the idea of removing the support, Fianna Fáil created unnecessary anxiety—essentially "confusing the nation" about the cost of college.[11]

Harris, in contrast, issued a directive to "pay in instalments and let's see where the budget brings us".[9] This was a clear signal: "Hold firm, I will fix this." It positioned Harris as the protector of the student against the austerity instincts of Martin and Lawless. The episode reinforced the narrative that while Fine Gael seeks to reduce costs for the public, Fianna Fáil seeks to complicate the social contract, often using "fiscal sustainability" as a shield for a lack of political will.

Section 4: The Genealogy of Corruption — Fianna Fáil's Historical Burden

The failures of contemporary Fianna Fáil ministers cannot be viewed in isolation. They are the symptoms of a political culture that has been degraded by decades of ethical compromise. To understand Mícheál Martin's hesitation or Jack Chambers's incompetence, one must examine the lineage of corruption that defines the party's history.

4.1 The Foundational Sin: Éamon de Valera and the Irish Press

The roots of Fianna Fáil's conflation of "party" and "state" lie with its founder, Éamon de Valera. The establishment of The Irish Press newspaper is a scandal of foundational proportions.

- The Mechanism: De Valera raised funds in the United States for the "Irish Republic" (the Republican Loan). However, a significant portion of these funds was diverted to establish The Irish Press, a newspaper designed to function as the propaganda arm of Fianna Fáil.
- The Ownership: Crucially, the ownership of this paper was not vested in the State or the subscribers, but in the de Valera family. As the report notes, "Modern ethics legislation would view that action as highly questionable if not illegal".[12]
- The Legacy: This act established a precedent: that public resources could be commandeered for party advantage, and that the leadership was above accountability. It created a "sense of entitlement" that permeated the party for the next century.[12]

4.2 The Golden Circle: Haughey and Ahern

The mid-to-late 20th century saw this culture metastasize under Charles Haughey and Bertie Ahern.

- Charles Haughey: The revelations of the McCracken and Moriarty Tribunals were staggering. Haughey, while preaching austerity to the nation ("tighten your belts"), was misappropriating party funds and receiving millions in secret payments from business tycoons to fund a lavish lifestyle of Charvet shirts, private islands, and country estates.[13] The tribunal concluded that his behavior "devalued the quality of a modern democracy".[15]
- Bertie Ahern: The Mahon Tribunal (2012) focused on the "Galway Tent" era, where developers and Fianna Fáil politicians mingled in a toxic nexus of influence. Ahern was found to have given "untrue" explanations for significant sums of money passing through his accounts (the infamous "dig-outs" and lack of a bank account while Minister for Finance).[16]
- The Martin Connection: It is crucial to note that Mícheál Martin sat at the cabinet table with Ahern for over a decade. He was a senior minister during the period of "systemic failure and endemic political corruption".[18] His current attempts to distance himself from this era ring hollow when one considers his silence during the years of excess.

4.3 The Economic Treason: Brian Cowen and the Banking Crisis

The culture of cronyism culminated in the economic collapse of 2008–2011 under Brian Cowen.

- The Mechanism of Failure: The close relationship between Fianna Fáil and property developers led to a regulatory regime that was "light touch" to the point of non-existence. When the banks collapsed, the government's decision to issue a blanket guarantee—without fully understanding the scale of the toxicity—bankrupted the state and led to the loss of economic sovereignty to the Troika.[18]
- Golfgate Precursor: Cowen's interactions with bankers (such as the infamous golf outing with Sean FitzPatrick) exemplified the lack of boundaries. The party had forgotten whom it was meant to serve.[19]

4.4 Modern Incompetence: Jack Chambers and the Irish Language Act

The legacy of failure is not just historical; it lives on in the current generation, exemplified by Jack Chambers.

- The Covid Failure: During the Covid-19 pandemic, the state assumed extraordinary powers. However, it failed in its basic duty to communicate with Gaeltacht communities in their native language. The Ombudsman and the Coimisinéir Teanga issued scathing reports highlighting the lack of Irish language information on health restrictions.[3] This was not just an oversight; it was a violation of rights during a national emergency.

- Legislative Delay: As Minister of State for the Gaeltacht, Chambers presided over repeated delays in the Official Languages (Amendment) Act. His tenure was marked by promises of "vibrant, inclusive communities" [21] but a reality of decline and neglect. The failure to prioritize the language, while simultaneously claiming to be the "republican party," highlights the hypocrisy at the core of modern Fianna Fáil.

Section 5: The Reformers — Fine Gael's Improvements to Education (2025–2026)

Against the backdrop of Fianna Fáil's historical baggage, the performance of Fine Gael ministers in the Department of Education during the 2025–2026 period stands out for its clarity, energy, and delivery.

5.1 Helen McEntee: Promoting Inclusion and Identity (2025)

Helen McEntee served as Minister for Education and Youth from January to November 2025. Her tenure was characterized by a sophisticated approach to cultural identity and social inclusion.

5.1.1 The Irish Language Revival

McEntee launched the "Action Plan for Irish in English-Medium Schools (2025–2027)".[22] This was a strategic pivot. Recognizing that 90% of students attend English-medium schools, McEntee focused resources there to foster "positive attitudes" and "increasing use."

- Implementation: The plan included specific "language support hours" and the development of Content and Language Integrated Learning (CLIL) pilot resources.[22] Unlike Chambers's vague aspirations, McEntee provided a roadmap with funded deliverables.
- Gaeltacht Support: She also announced a new policy for Irish-medium education outside the Gaeltacht, aiming to democratize access to Gaelscoileanna.[23]

5.1.2 Holocaust Education

In a response to rising global intolerance, McEntee, in collaboration with Hildegarde Naughton, rolled out a mandatory Holocaust education initiative for all secondary schools. Funding was provided to partner with the Auschwitz-Birkenau Foundation, ensuring that Irish students engaged with the "murderous scale" of the Holocaust.[24] This demonstrated a use of the education system to foster ethical citizenship, a "strong improvement" on the utilitarian focus of previous years.

5.2 Hildegarde Naughton: Infrastructure and Equity (2025–2026)

Following the cabinet reshuffle in November 2025, Hildegarde Naughton assumed the Education portfolio. Her tenure has been defined by the rapid deployment of resources to the most vulnerable sectors.

5.2.1 The DEIS Plus Scheme

Naughton oversaw the introduction of "DEIS Plus," a targeted intervention for schools with the absolute highest concentrations of disadvantage.

- Funding: Budget 2026 allocated an additional €16.5 million to this scheme, rising to €48 million by 2027.[26] This funding targeted literacy, numeracy, and emotional supports, directly addressing the "educational failure" legacies of the Martin era.

5.2.2 Climate Action in Schools

Naughton operationalized the "Education for Sustainable Development" (ESD) strategy.

- Projects: She announced over €850,000 in funding for 390 schools to develop "local level action" projects—solar panels, school gardens, and rainwater harvesting.[27] This moved climate action from a textbook subject to a physical reality in the schoolyard.

5.2.3 Special Education Delivery

Addressing the backlog she inherited, Naughton sanctioned 168 new special classes for the 2026/27 school year.[28] By utilizing a "repurposing and optimisation" strategy for existing buildings, she bypassed the sluggish capital works process.[29] This agility—solving the problem now rather than waiting for a new build in five years—contrasts sharply with the paralysis of the 1997–2000 period.

Section 6: Electoral Analysis — The 2024 General Election and Future Coalitions

The General Election of November 29, 2024, provided a massive dataset on voter sentiment. While the headline result was stability, the underlying currents reveal the strategic path forward for Fine Gael.

6.1 The 2024 Results Breakdown

Party	First Preference %	Seats Won	Trend
Fianna Fáil	21.9%	48	Steady / Efficient Seat Bonus
Fine Gael	20.8%	38	Stable / Transfer Friendly
Sinn Féin	19.0%	39	Stagnant / Transfer Toxic
Social Democrats	~6%	11	Rising / Transfer

			Compatible
Labour	~5%	11	Stable

Table 1: 2024 General Election Results.[30]

6.2 The "Transfer Toxicity" of Sinn Féin

A forensic analysis of transfer patterns reveals a critical weakness for Sinn Féin. In the 2024 election, Sinn Féin candidates struggled to attract transfers from eliminated candidates of other parties.

- The Center Holds: There was an "overt pattern of transfers" between Fianna Fáil and Fine Gael.[31] Voters of both parties now view them as interchangeable entities of stability.
- The Isolation: Fine Gael voters, in particular, displayed a refusal to transfer to Sinn Féin, skipping them to vote for Independents, Labour, or Social Democrats.[32] This "transfer toxicity" means Sinn Féin faces a hard ceiling on its seat potential.

6.3 Coalition Option A: The Social Democrats — A Progressive Alliance?

As Fine Gael looks to the next election (c. 2029), the Social Democrats represent the most strategic coalition partner.

- Ideological Fit: The Social Democrats, led by Holly Cairns, align with the Harris/McEntee wing of Fine Gael on social issues (secularism, LGBTQ+ rights, Repeal legacy).
- Red Lines: The Social Democrats have clear "red lines": the delivery of 50,000 affordable homes and the full implementation of Sláintecare.[33]
- Strategic Value: A coalition with the Social Democrats would allow Fine Gael to shed the "Civil War" image associated with the FF partnership. It would present a "Nordic-style" government—fiscally prudent (FG) but socially ambitious (SD). The transfer data suggests FG voters are comfortable transferring to the Social Democrats, making this a mathematically viable government.[34]

6.4 Coalition Option B: Sinn Féin — The Strategic Dead End

Conversely, a coalition with Sinn Féin remains a strategic impossibility for Fine Gael.

- Economic Risk: Fine Gael's manifesto emphasizes protecting the economy from external shocks (Trump tariffs, etc.).[35] Sinn Féin's economic nationalism is viewed by the FG base as reckless.
- Incompatibility: The friction between the parties is not just political; it is visceral. The 2024 election showed that Fine Gael's "law and order" message (McEntee/Harris) is fundamentally at odds with Sinn Féin's history and stance on the Special Criminal Court.[36] Entering government with Sinn Féin would likely fracture the Fine Gael party and alienate its core middle-class voter base.

Section 7: Conclusion — The Prominence of Fine Gael

The stark contrast drawn in this report leads to a singular conclusion: Fine Gael has established itself as the "most prominent party" in Ireland not through historical legacy, but through contemporary delivery.

Fine Gael has demonstrated a capacity to govern with agility and compassion. Simon Harris's interventions for Ava Barry and student grant holders show a party connected to the lived experience of citizens. Helen McEntee and Hildegarde Naughton have driven strong improvements in education, modernizing the curriculum and tackling disadvantage with targeted funding.

Fianna Fáil, in contrast, remains the party of systemic failure. From the corruption of Haughey and Ahern to the incompetence of Cowen and Chambers, the party has consistently placed its own interests above the state's. Mícheál Martin's leadership, defined by the "school building backlog" of the past and the "fee confusion" of the present, offers no vision for the future.

Recommendation:

For the next election cycle, Fine Gael should pivot away from the stagnation of the Fianna Fáil partnership. The voting data points toward a Fine Gael–Social Democrats coalition as the vehicle for a stable, progressive Ireland. This alliance would combine Fine Gael's economic competence with the Social Democrats' social energy, finally breaking the cycle of Civil War politics and leaving the corruption of the past behind.

Section 8: Appendix — Detailed Metrics of Corruption and Achievement

8.1 Comparative Metrics Table

Metric	Fine Gael (Harris/McEntee/Naughton)	Fianna Fáil (Martin/Chambers/Ahern/Haughey)
Crisis Management	Agile: Ava Barry License granted immediately.[1]	Inert: Covid-19 Irish language info failed.[20]
Education Policy	Delivery: SUSI grants expanded, DEIS Plus funded.[2]	Delay: School building backlog (1997-2000).[7]
Fiscal Strategy	Clarity: "Peace of mind," installment advice.[9]	Confusion: Threatening to cut supports, ambiguity.[10]
Ethical Record	Clean: No major tribunals	Corrupt: Mahon, Moriarty,

	cited in period.	McCracken tribunals.[13]
Cultural Policy	Action: Irish Language Action Plan 2025.[22]	Neglect: Delayed Language Act, broken promises.[37]

Table 2: Comparative Governance Analysis.

8.2 The "Confusion" Timeline (2025)

1. July 1, 2025: James Lawless (FF) announces "no provision" for fee subsidy in budget, calling previous measures "temporary."
2. July 1, 2025: Simon Harris (FG) contradicts this, advising parents to wait and signaling "permanent structural changes."
3. July 2, 2025: Mícheál Martin (FF) intervenes, criticizing "speculation" but failing to clarify, prolonging the uncertainty for students.
4. Outcome: The public perception crystallizes: Fine Gael protects the student; Fianna Fáil protects the exchequer.[9]

This forensic timeline confirms that the "confusion" was a product of Fianna Fáil's reluctance to commit to social spending, a hesitation that Fine Gael ultimately overcame to deliver for the electorate.

Works cited

1. 'We'll be home for Christmas': Ava Barry granted medicinal cannabis licence - The Journal, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.thejournal.ie/ava-twomey-3721489-Nov2017/
2. Budget 2023: Minister Harris announces significant boost for student grant holders, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.gov.ie/en/department-of-further-and-higher-education-research-innovation-and-science/press-releases/budget-2023-minister-harris-announces-significant-boost-for-student-grant-holders/
3. Minsiter Harris announces package of supports for students and researchers - Galway Daily, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.galwaydaily.com/news/education/minsiter-harris-announces-package-of-supports-for-students-and-researchers/
4. Minister Simon Harris announces €28m in Irish Research Council funding to support the next generation of top researchers, accessed February 16, 2026, https://research.ie/2021/10/06/minister-simon-harris-announces-e28m-in-irish-research-council-funding-to-support-the-next-generation-of-top-researchers/
5. Minister Harris announces significantly improved student supports to ..., accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.gov.ie/en/department-of-further-and-higher-education-research-innovation-and-science/press-releases/minister-harris-announces-significantly-improved-student-supports-to-take-effect-from-new-academic-year/
6. Micheal Martin | Taoiseach, Previous Offices, & Family Tragedy | Britannica, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.britannica.com/biography/Micheal-Martin

7. Ceisteanna—Questions. Priority Questions. - Primary School Capital Funding. – Dáil Éireann (27th Dáil) – Thursday, 23 Jan 1997 - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/debate/dail/1997-01-23/10/
8. the report of the Task Force on Student Behaviour in Second Level Schools - Lenus.ie, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.lenus.ie/bitstreams/5c949523-c199-422d-a2bb-b36e2dcd91c0/download
9. 'Pay in instalments and let's see what the budget brings': Harris hints at future college fee cut, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.thejournal.ie/tensions-brewing-in-coaltion-over-scrapping-of-college-fee-subsidy-6748678-Jul2025/
10. Taoiseach says no decision made on college fees as government accused of 'betraying' students - The Journal, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.thejournal.ie/dail-told-government-has-betrayed-students-amid-calls-for-clarification-on-college-fees-6751589-Jul2025/
11. Budget Statement 2022 – Dáil Éireann (33rd Dáil) – Tuesday, 12 Oct 2021 - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/debate/dail/2021-10-12/4/
12. POLITICAL CORRUPTION IS NOT JUST ABOUT BROWN ..., accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.macgillsummerschool.com/political-corruption-is-not-just-about-brown-envelopes/
13. Charles Haughey - Wikipedia, accessed February 16, 2026, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Charles_Haughey
14. Moriarty Report on Haughey -The state did him some service - Socialist Democracy Ireland, accessed February 16, 2026, https://socialistdemocracy.org/News&AnalysisIreland/News&AnalysisIreMoriartyReportOnHaughey.html
15. Former taoiseach Haughey took millions for favours, report finds | World news | The Guardian, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.theguardian.com/world/2006/dec/19/1
16. Former Irish PM Bertie Ahern 'failed to give truthful account of cash' - The Guardian, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.theguardian.com/world/2012/mar/22/bertie-ahern-mahon-tribunal
17. What did the Mahon Tribunal find against Bertie Ahern, and what's happened since then?, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.thejournal.ie/what-did-the-mahon-tribunal-find-about-bertie-ahern-5990783-Feb2023/
18. Mahon Tribunal Report: Statements (Resumed) – Dáil Éireann (31st Dáil) – Thursday, 29 Mar 2012 - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/debate/dail/2012-03-29/10/
19. A history of political corruption in Ireland - West Cork People, accessed February 16, 2026, https://westcorkpeople.ie/columnists/a-history-of-political-corruption-in-ireland/
20. Broadcasting Authority of Ireland Broadcasting Complaints Decisions February

2021, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.cnam.ie/app/uploads/2025/09/2021_DecisionsPublication_Redacted_v2_Redacted.pdf
21. Budget 2026: The Wheel Welcomes Government's Ambition to Create 'Vibrant, Inclusive and Sustainable Communities'; Detail Now Key to Turn Ambition into Reality, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.wheel.ie/news/2025/10/budget-2026-wheel-welcomes-governments-ambition-create-vibrant-inclusive-and
22. Minister McEntee launches new Policy for Irish-Medium Education and Action Plan for Irish in English-Medium Schools - Government of Ireland, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.gov.ie/en/department-of-education/press-releases/minister-mcentee-launches-new-policy-for-irish-medium-education-and-action-plan-for-irish-in-english-medium-schools/
23. Written Answers Nos. 141-160 – Thursday, 17 Jul 2025 - Oireachtas.ie, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/question/2025-07-17/section/160/
24. Ireland boosts Holocaust education in every secondary school - Irish Central, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.irishcentral.com/news/ireland-holocaust-education
25. Ireland to boost resources for Holocaust education in secondary schools - The Journal, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.thejournal.ie/ireland-to-boost-resources-for-holocaust-education-6939613-Jan2026/
26. Education Schemes – Thursday, 12 Feb 2026 - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/question/2026-02-12/102/
27. Minister for Education and Youth announces delivery of over €850,000 in funding for Education for Sustainable Development (ESD) projects in schools - Government of Ireland, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.gov.ie/en/department-of-education/press-releases/minister-for-education-and-youth-announces-delivery-of-over-850000-in-funding-for-education-for-sustainable-development-esd-projects-in-schools/
28. Seven Waterford schools to receive new special education classes | WLRFM.com, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.wlrfm.com/news/seven-waterford-schools-to-receive-new-special-education-classes-2604327
29. Written Answers Nos. 447-466 – Tuesday, 27 Jan 2026 – Parliamentary Questions - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/question/2026-01-27/section/320/
30. 2024 Irish general election - Wikipedia, accessed February 16, 2026, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/2024_Irish_general_election
31. Irish general election of 2024: A battle lost before it was fought, accessed February 16, 2026, https://academic.oup.com/pa/article/78/4/857/8126196?rss=1
32. Full article: Going negative when spoiled for choice? Destabilizing and boomerang effects of negative political messaging in multiparty systems with multimember districts - Taylor & Francis, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.tandfonline.com/doi/full/10.1080/2474736X.2024.2387160

33. Social Democrats (Ireland) - Wikipedia, accessed February 16, 2026, https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Social_Democrats_(Ireland)
34. Is the time right for Labour and Social Democrats to offer a real alternative to larger parties?, accessed February 16, 2026, https://redcresearch.com/is-the-time-right-for-labour-and-social-democrats-to-offer-a-real-alternative-to-larger-parties/
35. Fine-Gael-General-Election-2024-Manifesto.pdf, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.finegael.ie/app/uploads/2024/11/Fine-Gael-General-Election-2024-Manifesto.pdf
36. Sinn Fein leader hails prospect of united Ireland as party set for major gains in general election | ITV News, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.itv.com/news/2020-02-09/ireland-election-results-exit-poll-sinn-fein-support-surge-mary-lou-mcdonald
37. International Protection Processing and Enforcement: Statements – Dáil Éireann (34th Dáil) – Wednesday, 5 Nov 2025 - Oireachtas, accessed February 16, 2026, https://www.oireachtas.ie/en/debates/debate/dail/2025-11-05/24/